Dear Ed:

Vivian, Ilene, and I met today: we decided on one editorial suggestion in last line of Introduction. Strike "one" and replace with "an application that". This may take care of what one critic thought didn't make sense.

Our discussion focused on how thin email discussion of our work has been so far. We had expected much more back and forth like that between you and Cabrera.

We also have two questions for you. 1) How much discussion do you think has gone on off our email site (beside my faxes)? 2) Is our working group ahead of the others? Or did we just miss their reports?

Last, an answer to your question. Why do I fax rather than email? It's easier for me: I know how to use fax-modem; email requires print out for secretary who then types it in again (or carrying in a disk).

Sincerely,

Michael Davis
